Eleanor Emberson

This cycling across international borders is obviously addictive. We got out of baking hot Vienna today on the bikes and cycled further along the Danube to Bratislava, via a longish stop at the Roman ruins at Carnuntum.

To get to Carnuntum, we had to cross the Danube by a small, wooden motorboat masquerading as a ferry. This was about 10,000 tons light of the size of vessel on which I feel comfortable but I just held on tightly and prayed the bikes wouldn't fall in the water. On the other side we had a hike of half a kilometre or so on sand and gravel paths through lovely but mosquito-infested woods to reach the road. The museum and ruins were worth it, though. When we got to the old town in Bratislava, the chap in the photo was doing an excellent one-man rendition of that old Slovak favourite, 'Wicked Game' (it is one of my favourites but it took me a while to place it). Had a brief look around at the fascinating old buildings and modern art but then had to catch the train back to Vienna as I didn't fancy another 45 miles or so on the bike. Now back at the hotel, cooling off and itching gently. — with Bruce Ryan at Wien, Innere Stadt.

Eleanor Emberson Oh, yes! The whole Bratislava/Roman ruins thing was my idea so I must be enjoying the cycling, mustn't I? Best thing about today was zooming along without luggage. Felt great!

 Angela Warren We think you are totally crazy, and find it exhausting just reading about your holiday, but it's absolutely fascinating reading all your posts and looking at the wonderful photos. Hope we can meet up soon and hear all about the trip! ❤️
